INSTRUCTION: Read the following passage and answer the question through the option that follow.

Every work of art is the child of its age and, in many cases, the mother of our emotions. It follows that each period of culture produces an art of its own which can never be repeated. Efforts to revive the art principles of the past will at best produce an art that is still born. It is impossible for us to live as did ancient Greeks. In the same way those who strive to follow the Greek methods in sculpture achieve only a similarity of form, the work remaining soulless for all time. Such imitation is mere aping. Externally the pages with a thoughtful aspect but his action have for him no real meaning. There is, however, in art another land of external similarity which is founded on a fundamental truth. When there is similarity of inner tendency in the whole moral and spiritual atmosphere, a similarity of ideas, at first closely pursued but later lost to sight, a similarity in the inner feeling of any one period to that of another, the logical result will be a revival of the external forms which served to express those inner feelings in an earlier age. An example of this today is our sympathy, our spiritual relationship with the consequence all consideration of external form.

This all important spark of inner life today is at present only a spark. Our minds, which have even now only just awakening after years of materialism; are infected with the despair of unbelief, of lack of purpose and ideal. The nightmare of materialism, which has turned the life of the universe into evil, useless games, is not yet past. It holds the awakening soul still in its grip. Only a feeble light gimmers like a tiny star in a vast gulf of darkness. This feeble light is but a presentiment, and the soul, when it sees it. Trembles in doubt whether the light is not a mean, and the gulf of darkness reality. This doubt and the still-harsh of the materialistic philosophy divide our out sharply from that of the Primitive soul cracked when we seem to play upon it, as does a costly vase, long buried in the earth, which is found to have a flow when it is dug up once more. For this reason, the Primitive phase, through which we are now passing, with its temporary similarity of form, can only be of short duration.

QUESTION

1. Which of the following is the best title for this passage
(a) The art of the 20th Century (b) The dangers of materialism (c) Why primitive art cannot be rekindled (d) The similarities in artistic movements

(a) The inability of great artists like Vincent Van Gogh to achieve fame in their lifetime (b) the failure to reproduce art work that was created in the fourth century BC (d) the similarity between two paintings created a century apart, each in the midst of a great class war.
4. In saying that the soul "trembles in doubt" in paragraph three when it sees the "Feeble Light" in the line paragraph; the author suggests that (a) Artists have doubts about whether there of materialism is truly past

(b) The public is unsure that hunger of rapt will be met (c) artists do not know from where their next inspiration will come (d) the primitives found mysterious lights more frightening than modern people do.

5. How would the author characterize the effect of materialism of the artist's soul? (a) Supportive (b) confusing (c) Calming (d) Oppressive

PASSAGE 2

It is capital miser for a man to be at once both old and ignorant. If he were only old, and bad knowledge, he might loosen the tediousness of decrepit age by the pleasure of contemplation. If he were young though knew nothing, his later years would serve him to labour and learn, so that in "the winter of his time" when he is weary, he might find some comfort in his chair. But now, there is no man as wretched as he whose body is being withered by the passage of time and whose mind is totally unfurnished by those great ideas of science and the world in general.

A gray head with a wise mind is a treasure of grave precepts, experience and judgment. But, foolish old age is a barren vine in a season of harvest, or a university where foolishness is studied, every action is a pattern of infirmity while his body sits stills he does not know how to find his mind's action; and there is no life as burdensome or disguising as that of idleness.

What then? knowledge is not hurtful, but helps a good mind; anything that is laudable I desire to learn if I die tomorrow, my life today shall somewhat be sweeter for knowledge and if my days prove a summer one, it will be perfectly all right to have my mind as my compassion. I remember the answer given by Antitheses, the Athenian philosopher, when he asked what he had gained from all his studies. "By them" he said have learned both to live on with myself.

Athletes and actors let actors stands for the set of performing artist-share much. They share the need to make gesture as fluid and economical as possible, to make out a welter of choice the single, precisely right one. They need four thousands of hours of practice in order to train the body to become perfect. Instinctive instrument to express. Both athlete and actor, out of the abundance of emotion, choice, strategy knowledge of the terrain, mood of extractors, conditions of others in the ensemble, secrete awareness of injury or weakness and as nearly an absolute concentration as possible so that all externalities are integrated destruction absorbed to the self, must be able to change the self so successfully that it changes us.

When either athlete or actor can bring all these skills to "bear and focus them, then he or she will achieve that state of complete intensity and complete relaxation, complete coherence or integrity between what the performer has to do. Then there former is free, to them, all that has been learn, by thousand of practice and discipline and by repetition of pattern, becomes natural. Then intellect is upgraded to the level of an instinct. The body follows commands that precedes thinking.

When athletes and artists achieve self-knowledge that they transform the self so that we are recreated, it is finally and exercise in power. The individual power to dominate, on stage or field unvests the whole arena around the locus of performance dislike or resent the audience as much as they need and enjoy it. Power flows in an mysterious circuit from performers to spectator (1 assume a "live" performance) and back, and while cheers or applause are the hoped for outcome of performing, silence or gasps are the most desire when the moment has occurred then domination is complete and he performer triumph, in an inspiring results.

Read the passage below and answer question 7 - 11 that follow:

The epic poem Beowulf, written in Old English, is the earliest existing Germanic epic and one of four surviving Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. Although Beowulf was written by an anonymous Englishman in Old English, the tale takes place in that part of Scandinavia from which Germanic tribes emigrated to England. Beowulf, comes from Gaetland, the Southeastern part of what is now Sweden. Hrothgar, king of the Dane, lives near what is now Sweden, Hrothgar, king of the Denes, lives near what is now leire, on Zealand, Denmark's largest island. The Beowulf and several minor tales that reflect a rich Germanic oral tradition of myths, legends and folklore.

The Beowulf warriors have a foot in both the Bronze and Iron Ages. Their mead-halls reflect the wealthy living of the Bronze Age Northmen, and their wooden shields, wooden shafted spears, and Bronze Age warriors. However, they carry iron-tipped spears, and their best swords have iron or iron edged blades. Beowulf also orders an iron shield for his fight with a dragon. Iron replaced bronze because it produced a blade with a cutting edge that was stronger and sharper. The Northmen learned how to forge iron in about 500 B.C. although they has been superior to the European Celts in bronze work, it was the Celts who taught them how to make and design iron work. Iron was accessible everywhere in Scandinavia, usually in the form "bog-iron" found in the layers of peat in peat bogs.

The Beowulf epic also reveals interesting aspects of the lives of the Anglo-Saxons who lived in England at the time of the anonymous Beowulf poet. The Germanic tribes including the Agles, the Saxons, and

SECTION A: ENGLISH

Read the passage below and answer question 1-5 that follow.

Still reeling from the after-effects of our avoidable disgrace from the on-going World Cup in South Africa, I started rummaging through my achieves-too distraught to do any serious thinking other than nurse in quite mourning they immense disgrace in Durban. Then, I stumbled on this piece written in July, 2008; "At the height of judicial summersaults and double-takes in our election politics". It occurred to me that little had changed since then. So, I let myself go, as I went through the piece. It became obvious to day that a corrupt tree cannot produce incorruptible fruits. It beat me how anyone then expected any electoral law created by people whose mandates had been tarnished by allegations of electoral malpractices to curb or even attempt to eliminate electoral brigandage in Nigeria.

When past masters of rigging and their surrogates sit at the table to reform the electoral law, those of us pushed outside of the political equation are amused, and sadly resigned. We suspect we are being led by the nose, yet we can do no more than squint our noses, and hope the smell will go away.

1. How did the writer get the piece he read? (a) By picking up a novel
(b) By going though his store of old newspapers (c) by reading a textbook (d) By chatting with a friend.

READ THE FOLLOWING PASSAGE AND ANSWER THE QUESTION THAT FOLLOW

Those who understand the murky workings of a troubled mind will testify, on their professional oath, that a would-be arsonist or serial killer conducts himself just like any other local or neighbor, could be a loving spouse and parent, regular guy among his colleagues, a conscientious church-goers or alms-giver, predictable as clockwork in appointment, even sparkling with compliments and jokes.

Such an individual, catapulted to positions of responsibility, may actually prove second to none in the initiation and execution of laudable social schemes and projects. A madman, such experience psychiatrists will assure you, develops cunning of great subtlety that succeeds in disguising the dark, trouble interior, the seat of festering dementia until, of course, it is too late. Most nations recognize the sad fragility of the human mind, and understand that even the mind of political geniuses can break under strain, that the latent seeds of insanity in all of may actual come to bloom under the strain of existence, how much more when burdened with the enormity of power. We are no psychiatrists. So what do we possess that enable us to diagnose and counter the sign of incipient or advanced derangement? Well, there are numerous signs. When for instance, an individual substitutes himself for the totality, this is evidence of delusion, backed by the most precise of sciences, mathematics one can not substitutes to more than one. Fortunately, we can precisely identify and isolate the entity of one, and just as easily identify the rest. When that errant substitutes his will for the constitution, we are already with in the zone of questionable balance of mind and, as it happens the constitution has anticipated and offers the course of action that a people might purse when confronted with such a highly advance stage of solipsism.

Taken with other acts that build up a discernible pattern of irrationality and delusion, a case may be made of assembling the mandatory panel of experts to examine if the incumbent has indeed attained that stage of infirmity of body and mind where continuance in office poses grave danger to the well being of the totality.

18. The word "solipsism" in the fourth paragraph most nearly means (a) an advance stage of insanity (b) an inordinate projection of oneself (c) a course of action that promote infirmity (d) the substitution made by an errant entity
19. "The seat of festering dementia "in the second paragraph is an example (a) metonymy (b) synecdoche (c) Oxymoron (d) metaphor
